The Freedom List

Freedom is one of the five basic student needs identified by William Glasser. This simple strategy will enable you to extend freedom to your students so that they can develop self-control. Every school year, around week six, I'd offer my students the freedom to work away from their assigned desks. They had already gained enough insight into how our classroom operated that they understood I expected them to exhibit self-control. The new freedom was introduced to raise the bar a bit higher.
